TSBD SHOOTER IDENTIFIED

Forensic Evidence Places LBJ
"Hit Man" in "Sniper's Nest"

FINGERPRINT EVIDENCE IGNORED/
COVERED UP BY FBI-FURTHER
PROVING HOOVER-LBJ LINK

Two parallel investigations, both of which have been in progress for many years, have independently come to the same conclusion, and essentially through the use of the same evidence—evidence which proves "beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty," to paraphrase 1963 Dallas District Attorney Henry Wade, that a long-suspected hit man was present in the so-called "sniper's nest" on the sixth-floor of the Texas School Book Depository.

When the sniper's nest was searched, a palm print was identified as belonging to Lee Harvey Oswald, a former Marine-turned defector, and, coincidentally, the suspect who had been taken into custody. Other latents were found, and when the full roster of those who might have handled the cartons as TSBD employees were removed, that left latent prints of Detective Robert Lee Studebaker, who assisted Lt. Carl Day at the crime scene, as well as FBI Special Agent F.L. Lucy, who shipped the cartons to the FBI laboratory in Washington, DC without being too overly careful in his duties, and one other individual, who remained "unidentified."

Since that time, those "unidentified" latents, as well as a fingerprint card for a "known" suspect, were given to fingerprint experts who are not conspiracy buffs. The latents and the fingerprint card were submitted blind--without any suggestions of a match and without any identification.

The experts found between 14 and 18 points which matched the latents submitted to the fingerprint card submitted.

The fingerprint card was a complete set of prints for Malcolm E. "Mac" Wallace, and had been obtained in 1951 at the time that Wallace was arrested and convicted for murder.

The two investigations cited above began and have continued independently, although it is our understanding that there has been contact between the two. The Texas investigation targeted on Wallace many years back, and has developed a case (which its authors will reveal in greater detail shortly) which tracks Wallace to LBJ through a series of intermediaries and documents how and when the assassination was planned, and how payments were made to keep the cover-up in place.

The California based investigation, headed up by Glenn Sample, was published in a work entitled The Men on the Sixth Floor. In that work, Wallace is seen as a shooter; along with Oswald, and a one-legged Native American named Loy Factor, alleged to have been recruited by Wallace at Sam Rayburn's funeral in 1962. A female, known as "Ruth Ann," was also cited as present on the sixth floor during the assassination, and all perpetrators, according to this work, made a hasty getaway down the stairs of the TSBD and out the door to the waiting Rambler. (The subject of a brilliant essay by Richard Bartholomew, entitled, "Possible Discovery of an Automobile Used in the JFK Conspiracy," c. 1993, Richard Bartholomew; this essay has recently been on the net, as Mr. Bartholomew has expressed serious anger that a Texas marketing firm has sold it without his permission.) The Texas inquiry has yet to implicate Loy Factor or the mysterious "Ruth Ann," and it may be just as well; as that scenario was part of the concern at the time of the publication of Sample's book.

Mac Wallace was born in 1921 and attended the University of Texas, graduating in 1945. He came within the orbit of Lyndon Johnson early on as he railed against the policies of Coke Stevenson. In 1951, he left his job in Washington in haste when he discovered that a Texas golfer, John D. Kinser, was involved with Wallace's ex-wife, whom he would later marry a second and third time. Although he drove in great haste to get to Texas, and wasted no time in dispatching the golfer, Wallace was convicted only of second degree murder, and given what amounted to five years probation. When that five year term was up, the case was reopened and Wallace's record was essentially cleared, although the conviction was not so much overturned as brushed aside.

Wallace next figures heavily in the "suicide" of Henry Marshall, an Agriculture Department investigator (known to Wallace, as he had worked in the Agriculture Dept.), and someone who was getting perilously close to uncovering felonious behavior shared by Billy Sol Estes and Lyndon Johnson. Agent Marshall was found dead in 1961, having been shot five times with a single-shot bolt action rifle; cause of death, officially: suicide. This case was reopened in 1984 and the cause of death was changed to homicide by a specially empaneled grand jury. No true bill was returned, however, as the individuals alleged to have been named in the event, Lyndon Johnson, Cliff Carter, and Malcolm E. "Mac" Wallace, were all said to be deceased. Wallace, for the record, "died" in a car crash in Pittsburgh, Texas, on January 7, 1971, although whether or not he was actually killed in the crash remains a controversial issue.

Confidential documents from Naval Intelligence as late as 1962 and 1963 paint a very exotic profile of Wallace, who was under scrutiny because he was employed by Ling Temco Electronics and required top security clearance for that post. The October 22, 1951 murder of Kinser was noted, as is severely exotic sexual behavior (some of which looks "added" to the documents). On page 1 (of 6) of a Naval Intelligence Memorandum dated February 1, 1963, his past history is noted, and it is added, "When you add to the above that his thrice married wife, an admitted lesbian, charged him with [deleted by JFK/DPQ for reasons of decorum] on their minor daughter, applicant suggests all the least desirable elements of an utter bum." The report continues, however, "On the other hand applicant attended the University of Texas at Austin...is described by a number of friends and acquaintances as mild, ambitious, charming, and brilliant."

Wallace's ties to LBJ are legendary within the JFK assassination research community, and the case against LBJ, now massively strengthened by the fingerprint match, is available in Haley, A Texan Looks at Lyndon, North, Act of Treason, Zirbel, The Texas Connection, and, of course, Sample and Collum, The Men on the Sixth Floor. This topic is also given serious attention in Twyman, Bloody Treason.

Both investigations are continuing, as the story only begins with Mac Wallace, and goes on in great detail from there; the Texas investigation also has hundreds of pages of original documentation from a key individual in the pipeline which led from Dealey Plaza to LBJ. It should be noted here that documents and affidavits supplied by Billie Sol Estes in recent days have strongly supported the thesis stated herein.

It is highly likely that much of what has been noted here will be made public in press conferences and brief television announcements as you read this, or in days to come. It should be recalled, however, that these revelations do what no past events have done. The common anti-conspiracy rhetoric has always been, "Where is the hard evidence?" and, "If there was a conspiracy, why has not someone from the inside come forward and broken silence?"

The hard evidence now exists.

An insider has told the story, not yet published, of the connections that go directly to Lyndon Baines Johnson, who appointed the Warren Commission SO THERE WOULD BE NO REAL INVESTIGATION.

J.Edgar Hoover had the fingerprint proof all along, and kept it from the public..... till now.

This data answers one fundamental question: how many shooters were in the TSBD, and the answer is, "At least one more than the Warren Commission and Posner have sworn to." More questions are raised, and will be answered: the roles of Oswald, Ruby, Ferrie, Shaw, Connally (him, too...), Lady Bird, Hoover, as well as many others. When completed, the parallel investigations will have put in place the vast majority of the pieces to the puzzle. Much of what they will conclude has long been suspected and written about. Some previous research will be strongly reinforced, while other work will be found totally incorrect. It is hoped that when all "i's" are dotted, and all "t's" crossed, that this can be presented as the answer of a united research community.

The JFK/Deep Politics Quarterly is grateful to the people who have done this work, and for allowing us to give our readers a peek inside it. We hope to be able to tell you more--MUCH MORE--in upcoming issues. We must honor the researchers' requests for anonymity until such time as their identities become a matter of public record from them.
